MALAYSIA: The new Razak government will emphasize a nonaligned foreign policy and a pragmatic approach to domestic problems.

Deputy Prime Minister Razak, who replaces Prime Minister Rahman today, is expected to reorganize the cabinet next week. [REDACTED]

The new leadership does not promise major innovations in domestic policies, but it will continue efforts to improve the status of the Malay population in a way that will not alarm the Chinese minority. A special appeal to Malaysian youth is expected to be a major aspect of Kuala Lumpur's longer-range attempts to deal with communal problems.

In the foreign policy sphere, the changeover will probably result in an increasing emphasis on nonalignment. [REDACTED]
